EDITORIAL

I feel privileged in placing before the readers the new issue of the Researcher. The journal envisions is to create forum for review, reflection and discussion at interdisciplinary and multi-disciplinary knowledge of recent and ongoing researches in every field. It is also dedicated to propagate quality learning and disseminate information that would be in the interest for all including educators, researchers and practitioners.

An analysis of research publications around the world has shown that while India is among the world's top countries in terms of research output, the country's universities have fallen way behind in providing good research papers. Most of the publicised research in India is emanating from research institutes as opposed to universities, which typically account for a country's growth in research. In a globalised competitive world, Indian policy maker and administrators must focus on improving research performance in terms of number of publications produced by the institutions, the citations these publications receive, average citation per paper, share of international collaborative papers, number of share of high cited papers and emphasis on applied research.

This bi-annual journal is expected to be informative and practical oriented that would elaborate on the methods, techniques and goals of research. All papers undergo a series of revisions, reviews and re-submission before finally being accepted or rejected for publication by the editorial board. Suggestions, if any for the improvement in the quality of this journal are welcome from all corners.
